About this talk

Open interactive transcript »

Temple Grandin, diagnosed with autism as a child, talks about how her mind works – sharing her ability to “think in pictures,” which helps her solve problems that neurotypical brains might miss. She makes the case that the world needs people on the autism spectrum: visual thinkers, pattern thinkers, verbal thinkers, and all kinds of smart geeky kids.

About Temple Grandin

Through groundbreaking research and the lens of her own autism, Temple Grandin brings startling insight into two worlds. Full bio and more links

I think I'll start out and just talk a little bit about what exactly autism is. Autism is a very big continuum that goes from very severe, the child remains non-verbal, all the way up to brilliant scientists and engineers. And I actually feel at home here. Because there is a lot of autism genetics here. You wouldn't have any... (Applause)

It's a continuum of traits. When does a nerd turn into Asperger, which is just mild autism? I mean Einstein and Mozart and Tesla, would all be probably diagnosed as autistic spectrum today. And one of the things that is really going to concern me is getting these kids to be the ones that are going to invent the next energy things, now, that Bill Gates talked about this morning.

Okay. Now, if you want to understand autism, animals. And I want to talk to you now about different ways of thinking. You have to get away from verbal language. I think in pictures. I don't think in language. Now, the thing about the autistic mind is it attends to details. Okay, this is a test
