Search quality highlights: 39 changes for May

6/7/12 | 2:00:00 PM

May is often a big month for us in Search, and 2012 has seen no exception. This month we had exciting announcements including the Knowledge Graph, better search for users in mainland China, and an updated Search App for iPhone. We also released new sports features, deeper detection of hacked pages, and much more.

You know about these.

Search and Weather Control, but ultimately decided they were a little too foulish.

Here's the real list for April:

- Categorize paginated documents. [launch codename "Xirtam3", project codename "CategorizePaginatedDocuments"] Sometimes, search results can be dominated by documents from a paginated series. This change helps surface more diverse results in such cases.

expanding to these deeper pages.

- Autocomplete predictions used as refinements. [launch codename "Alaska", project codename "Refinements"] When a user types a search she'll see a number of predictions beneath the search box. After she hits "Enter", the results page may also include related searches or "refinements". With this change, we're beginning to include some especially useful predictions as "Related searches" on the results page.
- More predictions for Japanese users. [project codename "Autocomplete"] Our usability testing suggests that Japanese users prefer more autocomplete predictions than users in other locales. Because of this, we've expanded the number of predictions shown in Japan

You know about these, too.

Not to mention this...

If the last few months of ranking changes have shown me anything, it's that poorly executed link building strategy that many of us call white hat can be more dangerous than black-hat strategies like buying links. As a result of well intentioned but short-sighted link building, many sites have seen significant drops in rankings and traffic. Whether you employ link building tactics that are black, white, or any shade of grey, you can do yourself a favor by avoiding the appearance of link spam.

It's become very obvious that recent updates hit sites that had overly aggressive link profiles. The types of sites that were almost exclusively within what I called the "danger zone" in a post about one month before ty links are highly correlated, but anchor text appears

It has been pretty quiet recently on this front, with only a few complaints per day in the forums about these notifications. But that all changed yesterday when tons of webmasters began receiving these notifications.

We have threads in most of the forums but here are some select threads at Google Webmaster Help, Google+ and WebmasterWorld.

Almost all of them plead innocence but the fact of the matter is, they received this notification and they most likely will see a downgrade in ranking within the week. This

This presentation features a real person, RACHEL DREILINGER, appearing as an audience surrogate.

Rachel is not an REI employee. Her husband, SEAN DREILINGER, shot these photos of her.

You can follow all of their real-life adventures on Sean's photostream.

I'm grateful for Sean's talent, his willingness to share photos of his family, and for his support of CREATIVE COMMONS.
